

OKLAHOMA CITY - Farming and other agricultural activities shape the landscape in ways that really stand out in an urban environment. Rooted Farm, an urban Oklahoma City agricultural pursuit that has been operating for several years, plans to make its mark on some property near Stockyards City. The operation had been growing microgreens, which it sells at farmers markets in Oklahoma City and Edmond, using a greenhouse at Oklahoma City's Downtown Airpark. But with redevelopment of that land underway, Rooted Farm's owner, Joshua Guess, is moving his operation to a 2-acre site near Rotary Park.
