

Itâ€™s not just Halloween season. Itâ€™s anniversary season. Tulsa Project Theatre is kicking off its 10th anniversary season with a revival of â€œLittle Shop of Horrors.â€• Performances will begin Friday, Oct. 25 and run through Sunday, Nov. 3 in the Williams Theatre at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center. The Tulsa World is rounding up its annual list of family-friendly Halloween attractions (scarier attractions will get â€œspook-lightedâ€• by the Tulsa World later this month). The Tulsa metro area is blessed with a smorgasboard of pumpkin patches and kid-friendly attractions, but you can also experience seasonal treats on stages. For instance, Tulsa Ballet is presenting â€œGiselleâ€• for the first time in 15 years. Performances are scheduled for Oct. 31-Nov. 3 at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center. Summary: â€œWhen a young woman is betrayed by her fiancÃ© and dies brokenhearted, she rises from the grave to save her beloved from the revenge of other scorned women.â€• And, as mentioned above, â€œLittle Shop of Horrorsâ€• will be available for those who want to plant themselves into a seat for Tulsa Project Theatreâ€™s season-launcher. A blood-hungry-and-growing plant named Audrey II will be a centerpiece attraction. Expect a different spin on Audrey IIâ€™s progression, according to director Juan Reinoso. â€œI think itâ€™s a very interesting approach to what has traditionally been done with Audrey II actually getting larger,â€• he said. Reinoso was introduced to â€œLittle Shop of Horrorsâ€• when he saw the 1986 film version. Asked if Tulsa Project Theatreâ€™s interpretation will be kid-friendly, he said certain adult-themed things in it will likely go over kidsâ€™ heads. He described it as â€œPG-11, maybe.â€• Itâ€™s a local production, but Reinoso said some New York professional people are involved with the show. He said the actor who will play Mr. Mushnik is an actual equity performer who recently moved here. For tickets, go to tulsaprojecttheatre.com. Tulsa Project Theatre debuted in 2010 with â€œThe Rocky Horror Show.â€• Among other family-friendly Halloween options: Halloween Festival at Castle of Muskogee 3400 W. Fern Mountain Road, Muskogee At 6 p.m., the monsters of Castleton emerge to gather in the village. The music starts and the ghouls begin their dance, which signifies the beginning of the evening

The track loops through the woodlands up the maypole and back. Everyone may ride, but it may especially appeal to younger visitors. Families can enjoy an array of activities within the realm of Halloween Land (8 & under). The Castle Village offers pony rides, inflatables, cocoa and sweets. There are multiple scarier options available for fright-minded visitors. A "scare" rating system is used to rank the fright level of attractions.
